Ethics continued from page 1

- 2. Textbook and academic authors shall strive for the highest standards of writing quality and shall endeavor to produce work that is understandable and clear; the writing style should recognize the educational level of the audience.
- 3. Textbook and academic authors shall present the information in their text with accuracy, impartiality, and balance in order that all readers may receive an accurate assessment of topics covered in the text.

B. Academic Community

- 4. Textbook and academic authors, or teams of authors, shall write with integrity, following recognized principles of scholarship and utilizing sound methodological techniques.
- 5. Textbook and academic authors shall accurately report and appropriately give credit to other sources utilized in their work, including authors quoted or whose ideas have been highly influential.
- 6. Textbook and academic authors shall bear responsibility for all material appearing under their name, not permitting their name to appear on works they did not write.

C. Discipline

- 7. Textbook and academic authors shall respect the freedom of instructors in choosing educational material. Moreover, textbook and academic authors will not participate in providing compensation to schools or instructors for the adoption of their work.
- 8. Textbook and academic authors shall continue to acquire, apply, and advance knowledge by remaining current in their discipline.
- 9. Textbook and academic authors shall take care that there exists no conflict of interest in utilizing their own published material.

D. Publisher

- 10. Textbook and academic authors shall deal honestly with publishers, honor their contracts and provide materials to publishers in a timely manner.
- 11. Textbook and academic authors shall expect publishers to treatauthors with fairness, honoring conditions in contracts, promptly paying royalties, and acting timely on manuscripts.
- 12. Textbook and academic authors shall provide to publishers a coherent prepared manuscript and shall expect in return publishers to provide timely and competent review of manuscripts, and make no changes in a manuscript without the author's permission.
- 13. Textbook and academic authors shall avoid conflict of interest with other authors when agreeing to review manuscripts for publication. Textbook and academic authors shall normally decline to review a manuscript when the work, if published, would compete with the reviewer's own published work.

MEMBERS ARE ASKED TO FURNISH COPIES OF PUBLISHING CONTRACTS

WE NEED YOUR HELP!! TAA Headquarters would like to request that each member please furnish us a copy of any/all of your publishing contracts for our permanent file.

This file can be accessed by members before they begin negotiations with their publisher for their works.

Personal data will be erased and will remain confidential in all cases. Please send copies to:

TAA

Box 535

Orange Springs FL 32182

Bibliography continued from page 5

Contends that negative incentives for textbook writing among professors has led to the erection of serious obstacles to textbook reform.

Willows, D. M., & Houghton, H. A. (1987). Basic Research: The Psychology of Illustration (Vol. 1). New York: Springer-Verlag. Gives an overview of current thinking and research concerning the role of illustrations in learning. Includes discussions of memory, affective response, the effect of pictures on prose learning, and the role of charts, graphs, and diagrams.

Woodward, A., Elliott, D. L., & Nagel, K. C. (1988). Text-books in School and Society: An Annotated Bibliography and Guide to Research. New York: Garland. An extensive bibliography and guide to all aspects of text-books. The logical place to begin any research concerning textbooks.

JUNE 23-25, 1994

SEATTLE, WA

TAA CONVENTION

BACK ISSUES of this newsletter available:

1988: January, April

1989: January, July, Oct 1990: January, April, July

1991: July, October

1992: January, April, July, Oct

1993: January, April, July, Oct

$3.00 each or 4 for $10. One of each $36. Text and Academic Authors Association, Box 535, Orange Springs, FL 32182. Payment by credit card, check, or money order accepted.